Goodbye to my favourite journal

With these few lines, I greet all the entomologists who have collaborated with the “Bulletin of Insectology”. When Stefano Maini asked me (in 2002) if I wanted to collaborate, since the journal would have changed its look, I immediately accepted and took the project to heart, carrying it forward throughout all these years, but at that time I was working at the entomology library of the University of Bologna and I still had no idea how to manage a scientific journal. Over time I learned many things.

Most of you do not know me and have never heard of me, but I have read and written the messages with each of you, your manuscripts, the revisions and everything needed for the layout of each article.

I am satisfied with the results obtained, considering that at the beginning it was a leap in the dark. Now it is time to change my life, retirement is coming, other things to do, the family... everything I have done up to this issue will be done by Pensoft, certainly in a more professional way.

A (virtual) hug and best wishes to everyone.
Ciao
